CURING BACON.

The season will soon arrive for the curing of bacon hams, and in anticipation thereof, we think it of some moment to throw out such hints as will enable farmers and other householders to secure for their families the choicest quality of meat. Many receipts are annually published for the curing of hams, and yet how seldom it is in private houses that we find a really unexceptionally fine article. No other kind of meat is comparable to the taste of the epicure to a well-cured ham of bacon, and yet how often it is that, from some defect in the process of preserving, but mostly in the cooking of it, is the anticipated enjoyment disappointed.

It is stated that about a million of sugarcured hams are put up in Chicago alone, and the art of curing them, including their successful packing for preservation, requires so much care and skill, that an expert in the business readily secures for his services as high as $250 per month. These hams are shipped to Europe, Canada, Mexico, the West Indies, and South America, but the largest market in this country is Philadelphia, and the next New York. The following is the process adopted, as we gather from an article on the subject from the New York Tribune:

The hams chosen are of an average weight

The hams chosen are of an average weight curing two or three pounds each of this weight.

The brine is carefully preserved from one season to another, and is supposed to increase in strength as it is considered to the content of the stribution of which has induced orders from almost every State in the Union, and goods sent invariably elicit satisfactory responses. crease in strength as it increases in to his new place of business with his other course replaced by constant additions. The brine is formed of water, sugar-house syrup, saltpetre, salt, and certain other ingredients, in proportion as the experience and tastes of the packers differ. Casks are filled with this brine, in which green hams, assorted by weight, Northern or Western Virginia. in proportion as the experience and tastes of brine, in which green hams, assorted by weight, are soaked from thirty-five to fifty days, according to the different weight of the hams. When the hams are removed from the pickle, they are immersed, for a short time, in clear water, and hung up in the smoking houses for drying, which is an important part in the proprocess, the hickory timber is considered indispensable. Next they have to be prepared for market in such a manner that they will be preserved indefinitely. Each ham is immersed in a thick paste wash, largely composed of chrome yellow, which fills up every interstice of the subsequent under and outer garments carefully wrapped and sewed upon it. Then comes the wrapping in thick brown paper and the stitching upon it of the closely-fitting case of stout cotton cloth. Next the brand is placed upon it, and the ham is ready for market.

NEWSPAPER "BEATS."-We suppose there must be, at the most modest calculation, between fifteen hundred and two thousand persons in this vicinity who get their newspaper reading for nothing, including the unconscionable individuals who steal papers from other people's doors, or borrow from their neighbors, or loaf around where a newspaper is subscribed for, and paid for, and monopolize it to the ex-clusion of the rightful owner. We have had several subscribers stop their subscriptions, for no fault of our carriers, as they admitted, in non-delivery, but because their papers, after being delivered, were taken by some individual as short of conscience as of cash, who would take possession of it. Thus a newspaper, which ought to be well supported by a community for is it is expected to live without resources, and to advertise the life and business of a town without the support which is requisite to enable it to keep up to a metropolitan standard of excellence. An individual should blush to read a paper habitually which another individual pays for. There are too many people who read papers which they do not pay for, and this is for their eyes especially, with the purpose of searing their conscience, if they have any, and for the purpose of appealing to those who do subscribe and pay for newspapers, to keep them filed and not permit them to go out of their possession, in justice to themselves as well as to the printer, whose capital and labor are invested in a business which serves to advertise the commercial status of a city in proportion to the enterprise its substantial patronage enables it to display. - Nashville Banner.

THE LATE DR. NELATON. - The Paris correspondent of a medical journal gives a pleasant reminiscence of the celebrated Dr. Nelaton, physician to the late Emperor, whose death was recently announced by cable:

"As I passed into the ball I heard groans, evidently of a child in great pain, the door leading to the sick ward was ajar, and I heard the voice of a man talking earnestly with a little sufferer. There was something very affecting in the imploring tones of the child's voice and the tender and sympathizing replies of the physician, and it seemed to me not wrong to witness unseen, through the crack of the half open door, the scene that was passing within. On a narrow pallet near the window lay a fine boy, nine or ten years old, dying of cancer, developing itself between the eyes and behind the nose. It had not shown itself externally, but had destroyed the sight, and was attended by excruciating suffering. By his side sat a stately white-haired man, holding with one hand the two of the little patient, while with the other he caressingly smoothed his hair. The child told the story of his pain, Ah, je souffre tant! ('O! I suffer so much'), to which the old man listened patiently, promising to devise some relief. Then he rose to leave, but first bent over the boy, and with tears dropping from his eyes, kissed his forehead as lovingly as a mother. The white haired man was the world-renowned Nelaton.
